A: I use this site when I'm looking for a key generator: Detoxification in the marine hydrothermal vent tubeworm Riftia pachyptila: free-living and symbiont-associated microbial communities. Hydrothermal vents are microbial hotspots that harbor communities of chemosynthetic organisms that create a unique benthic environment. The discovery of the marine vent tubeworm Riftia pachyptila provided a rare opportunity to sample the microbial communities of these apparently unique ecosystem niches. Rapid colonization of the tubeworm by bacteria and sulfide-oxidizing archaea (Sulfolobales) was observed in tubeworm tubular tissues. From an individual tubeworm, approximately 35,000 cells were fluorescently labelled with BacLight live/dead staining and shipped to the Stowasser Laboratory at Caltech for microscopic and analytical chemistry measurements. Small-subunit rRNA sequence analysis of symbiont-associated bacteria (family Desulfotomacaceae) from tubeworms indicated that multiple taxa from this group, including Desulfotomaculum baculatum, Isotricha foraminifera, and Hypsibius dujardini, were hosted by R. pachyptila. A close relationship between the tubeworm and Desulfotomaculum-like species was revealed. Rapid recovery of native vent bacterial communities (dominantly Desulfotomaculum with additional Hypsibius and Metallibacter spp.) from digesta, mouth, and gut sections of tubeworms is evident from small-subunit rRNA sequence analyses.
